Keeping kids healthy

Children do not need to be sick to see a doctor. Your child should have a well-child checkup every year. The doctor will make sure your child is healthy and up to date on immunizations. These are shots that help protect kids from diseases like polio and measles.

Young children may need to be checked for lead exposure. Lead exposure can cause learning and behavior problems.

Is your child a teenager? He or she will need an adolescent health check. This may include a screening for depression. The doctor may ask about risks teenagers may take, like using drugs.

Call Home State Health or go online to HomeStateHealth.com to learn more about the recommended vaccines for your child.

Home State Health, a MO HealthNet Managed Care Health Plan, helps make it easy for members to access medical, behavioral health, vision, and dental services.
